Holistic Aromatherapy for Animals - Kristen Leigh Bell 2012-06-01

It is only in recent years that aromatherapy, or essential oil therapy, has gained substantial acceptance; this is primarily due to French veterinarians who have begun using essential oils and hydrosols in their practices. Laypeople, of course, have been enjoying great success treating animals with the very same substances for many years; for it is not just the medical professionals who can safely and effectively administer these aromatic oils. Anyone enabled with quality essential oils or hydrosols and adequate knowledge can use a plant's most concentrated and energetic byproducts to improve the health of their animals, and treat and prevent various illnesses and common ailments. Aromatherapy is actually a science that has a much larger archive of supported scientific data than most other holistic care methods. However, most of these studies were originally published in French or German. Aromatherapy was the first natural, holistic therapy the author began using, and she relies on it as my primary form of healthcare to treat and balance all sorts of minor ailments and discomforts in the lives of her family and their pets. She has rarely needed to use any other sort of remedy to achieve the desired result. These powerful substances are the most fascinating, sensual and complex of all natural therapies -- a combination that proves to be so enthralling it eventually develops into a grand passion for many.

Smell is a significant primordial sense. The first major nerve, which enters the brain determines scent. Consequently, the nerve along with the information it has detected connects right away to the brain's base. In turn, the brain responds immediately. The scent may affect one's emotions, thoughts, and actions.

For instance, good smells are usually attractive to one's sense of smell and can induce calmness and a certain feeling of happiness. Bad smells, on the other hand, can cause aggravation or repulsiveness. Similarly, animals, including dogs, use their sense of smell to obtain various types of information from their environment. They use the information they have gathered to predict or calculate their response as well as their states of energy. If you are a dog owner, you can use essential oils to help boost the immune system of your pet. Frankincense & Myrrh - Martin Watt 2012-05-31

The story of frankincense and myrrh runs in tandem with man's evolution. Their use in so many varied ways has accompanied man and woman through the uncertain and often stormy path of life. Once prized as highly as gold, frankincense and myrrh's use in perfumery suggested an exclusivity as do the celebrated perfumes of today. But they offered much more than mere aesthetic delight. At times they were a life-line to spiritual and physical health and well-being. Over many centuries the use of frankincense and myrrh pervaded a wide range of societies and religions. The caravan trails for this valuable cargo have disappeared but these aromatics continue to be valuable commodities both in the East as well as in the West. Frankincense and Myrrh continue to excite the imagination and are probably the most famous aromatics of all time. Their appeal and magic will never die and this book explains why.
